

Elisa Chan for mayor?

Not this time around, of course, but the list of supporters for District 9 candidate Elisa Chan's February 17 fundraising reception is a San Antonio dream team of business and political leaders, suggesting that if she performs well on council, her local political future could be long and bright. Just a partial name-drop: former Valero CEO and Haven for Hope co-founder Bill Greehey and his NuStar PAC, Red McCombs, Ed Whitacre, developer "advocates" Frank Burney, Ken Brown, and Daniel Ortiz, the Feiks of DPT Laboratories fame, roofer and treasurer for our current and (most likely) future mayor Mike Beldon, and County Judge Nelson Wolff, whose son Kevin vacated the seat last year for the Commissioners Court. Tracy Wolff is her treasurer. Chan, who with her husband owns and operates Unintech Consulting Engineers, has demonstrated that she's willing to play well with current leadership priorities: She chaired a subcommittee of the Cultural Facilities committee for last spring's venue-tax initiative, and promoted the 2007 bond initiative by working with the Foundation for the Future campaign. She's also credited with more-or-less singlehandedly reviving the Alamo Asian American Chamber of Commerce.